

What is dental calculus?

Dental calculus consists of calcified (= petrified, mineralized) tooth deposits that form wherever bacterial plaque persists long enough to incorporate mineral salts. Calculus tends to form at those sites where the salivary glands lead into the oral cavity, i.e. on the inside of the lower incisors and on the outside of the upper, anterior molars.